Message from our Minister

“The reality of all life is interdependence. We need to compose our lives in such a way that we both give and receive, learning to do both with grace, seeing both as parts of a single pattern....”

words of Mary Catherine Bateson

Whether it is the neighbor or friend we are concerned about or someone across the planet, we can deepen our connection toward our fellow humans, and all living beings through opening the doorway of compassion. Perhaps there really are no strangers, no enemies, just people we have not begun to know and understand. This is real work and takes the energy of faith, the strengthening of our courage. It can feel overwhelming to try and include everyone in our circle of care, but really, what choice do we have? We want to deepen our own belief in the realities of interdependence. It might feel safer, easier even to imagine that we can operate independently or just rely on our family or close friends, but there might be a yearning to extend that connection beyond the familiar. Or we might experience a crisis or need, a desire to help support the wholeness and healing, encouraging our circle to widen and widen. Bateson offers that “the reality of all life is interdependence” so let’s imagine when we feel that to be true. I know it’s when I make a connection with someone I have just met, or am able to send a prayer across the miles in an effort to ease suffering or acknowledge that none of us is ever truly alone. There seems to be an abundance of independent thinking and actions taken, without a true acknowledgement of how this will impact others down the road, downstream, across town or beyond the walls. It needs to be about asking ourselves, how will this impact others? I have an old fence separating my property from my neighbors and it’s falling down on its own. There are boards missing now and it badly needs to be painted. Tree branches on “my” side are draped down, almost touching their roof and an old tree on “their” side fills my yard with leaves. A few weeks ago, I met them at the fence and we began talking. We hadn’t spoken in a long time.

Sometimes we can be so far away from the ones just over the fence.... But we got re-acquainted, and I asked about the old fence, offering to help with repairing it, asking what they thought we might do. Making assumptions, worrying, and not wanting to risk reaching out. This may seem like a minor conversation, just about an old fence that maybe just needs to be taken down, but it is amazing how a barrier like that can keep us apart. We stood on either side. I was just relieved that we had finally talked and perhaps the best remedy will be to let it fall down on its own. We'll see. The three of us, my neighbors and I, had a few minutes to exchange a few details about our lives, beginning to form a small bit of community right then and there. Bateson writes that we need to "...realize that we are not solitary, to weave the threads of personal experience, including experiences in different contexts, into the fabric of community even as we embrace the knowledge that we are not alone." Bridging the gap, extending a hand, having a beginning conversation to make connections will then lead to more, and more, fostering interdependence, and deepening our compassion. May these early summer days open us to the unfamiliar, giving us pause, reminding us what is truly important.

with love, Rev. Telos

Summer Warmth

We stand at the edge of summer.

The sun has at last warmed us enough that we begin to trust in its presence.

The last burst of spring blossoms, lavender and white and deep pink banks of rhododendron, are giving way to summer peonies and roses.

O source of the turning seasons,

Of earth, of life, of promise gradually becoming fulfillment,

May your people find a lightening of the burdens with a brightening of the sky.

~ Helen Cohen
